For this video, I was planning on overlapping the beautiful natures of life to illustrate what people have lost sight of over the many years humans have been on this planet. The reason for this video is to give back to nature. To be able to love what has been given to us in life is true happiness. Whether someone is in pain of loss, psychological effects, or even depression, this video is there to provide relief and calmness to the person watching it. While trying to figure out the concept of this video, I realized that I wanted to create something that I needed to relieve myself of my present life.

The main concepts of this video is to show: birth, growth, destination, and beauty of life all together. Scenery is a beauty that is formed from nature. Nature has been around before humans or any other species were ever born. Looking at nature calms a person down when they see it, so that is why I put that in the beginning of the video. To compliment nature, I chose to put buds blossoming into flowers because it shows the growth in life. Life is precious and beautiful. It shouldn't be taken lightly, but should also be happy.

After introducing the concept of flowers, I chose to introduce the real concept of life to the people alive. Life is inevitable to end one way or another.

I wanted to illustrate the beauty of animals from adulthood to their young age, since there will always be animals and other species in this world that will be born and continue living even without human civilization around. This is how I feel in my heart and mind. Through the process of making this video, I believe this world is beautiful because it grows to change, whether it be good or bad, this world is everyone's to live on.
