From a random email tangled in gibberish, there came the quintessential term “Net Art.” Like a viral video, Net Art became associated with many technical aspects such as images, emails, texts, and more. A diverse community of artists and tech enthusiasts was established and flourished. From 1995-1998, this diverse community created many works of art such as “My Boyfriend Came Home From the War” and “Jodi.org.”

Due to the undersaturation of the early internet, the creativity of the early internet was limitless. While American corporations dominated the early internet, Eastern Europe used the early internet to create ideas of an utopian society.
