Don't Fear the Internet

After reading and watching the videos on Don't Fear the Internet by Jessica Hische and Russ Maschmeyer I feel that I was able to learn a lot about HTML and CSS. Websites are very hard to make and develop because embedded in them is a lot of code and a lot of people can easily give up when making a website that is basic. Don't Fear the Internet is a website that helps people who are afraid to learn HTML and CSS and teaches the viewer like it is their very first time coding. One takeaway from this website and with the videos I watched, I learned that indentation and organization are key when making a website. Since coding is a very complex topic and there is a lot of code that needs to go into a website, being organized will help ultimately make this process way easier and reduce the risk of mistakes.
